Why is it so difficult to negotiate health care?

Because we are in the midst of a national health care crisis.

U.S. workers pay the highest prices for health care, yet the U.S. covers fewer people than any other country. Last year, 85 million Americans went without health insurance.

The U.S. is the only country that doesn't control health care costs such as that of prescription drugs. As a result, every five years the cost of health care doubles. This causes millions of people to be dropped from the rolls of insurance and for those who are covered, like you, to pay more for health care.
